From his rope in an instant poor Harlequin fell;
 Yet he touched not the ground, but with talons outspread,
 Hung suspended in air at the length of a thread.
 Then the grasshopper came, with a jerk
 and a spring,
 Very long was his leg, though but short was
 his wing;
 He took but three leaps, but was soon out of sight.
 Then chirped his own praises the rest of the night.
 With step so majestic, the snail did advance,
 And promised the gazers a minute to dance;
 But they all laughed so loud that he pulled
 in his head,
 In his own little chamber to bed,
 The shadows

A man had a little daughter who was the apple of his eye. One night as his wife and he were entertaining half a dozen friends the child came to him and said:

"Papa, how long do people live?"

He patted her cheek and answered:

"Our allotted span, my child, is 70 years."

Everybody was silent while the little girl's lips moved in mental calculation. At length she said:

"Then you'll live to be 140, won't you, papa?"

"Why, no, of course not." And the man and all his guests laughed heartily. "What on earth do you mean, child?"

"Isn't it true, then," said the little girl, "what everybody says about you're living a double life?"—Springfield Union.

Isaac went to Glasgow to open a shop. He soon found, however, that Scotsmen are not easily bested. In fact by the end of six months trade had got so bad that Isaac decided to shut down and leave the city.

He was going to get his ticket at the station when he bumped into a friend, who had just come from London.

"Hey, Moses!" he said, "what are you doing here? Glasgow is no place for you. Go back before you are ruined, my boy; it's no good opening a shop in this town."

"Who said it was?" replied Moses.

"I've not come to start a shop."

"Then what 'ave you come for?"

"Why, Isaac, I've come to complete my education!"—London Tit-Bits.

A Perfectly Clean-Cut Job

One quiet humid night in an Atlanta barroom a negro visitor sat down to a game of faro. Everything was bright and fair until the dealer attempted some crooked tactics with the box. An argument ensued in a low tone of voice and many references of a more or less personal character were passed over the layout, both ways. Suddenly the victim of corrupt practice leaned across the table and with a single swipe of a razor paid his respects to the dealer, who for some unaccountable reason kept his seat, smiling blandly.

"Looks to me," commented a bystander, "lak as how you never touched him."

"Is dat so?" replied the razor artist. "Wait till he shakes his haid."
